The home of the conservation professional

CONTEXT

The Institute of Historic Building Conservation is the principal body representing professionals and specialists involved in the conservation of historic buildings and their surroundings across the UK. Its members include conservation officers in central and local government, architects, surveyors, structural engineers and other specialist consultants, conservators and craftsmen.

Cathedral Communications, well known for The Building Conservation Directory, also publishes the institute's highly regarded news and information magazine Context. Context informs readers about developments in professional practice and the management of the historic environment and provides a diverse and interesting forum for discussion about issues of professional concern.

How it works

Advertising regularly in Context offers you a direct and cost effective way of reaching the people responsible for controlling all alterations to historic buildings, for the protection and enhancement of conservation areas, and for specifying a wide variety of work within the historic environment. With five issues per year, you have the opportunity to keep everyone up-to-date with the latest developments in your organisation and products and services range in this rapidly changing market.

Who uses it?

Context goes out five times a year to 2,600 individual IHBC members plus other conservation professionals on subscription.

The IHBC also sends out 1,400 copies of each issue to other selected organisations, course providers and exhibition organisers based on the issue themes.

Free flipping-page digital versions of Context are provided in the Context Archive on www.ihbc.org.uk to extend its reach even further.
